There is one very successful merchant in a South-west Missouri town who each morning in the local paper has a new talk. It is reproduced just as the proprietor says it. He is a man of little education, so far as hooks are concerned.

prietor says it. He is a man of little education, so far as books are concerned, and his language is naturally eccentricty. This eccentricity is not emphasized, neither is it mitigated. There are few final "gs" in the advertisement and the spelling is peculiar, but the reader recognizes the language of the merchant, which in thirty years of business has never misled his customers, and they rely upon his talks, which are brief and pointed, more than they do upon his regular advertisement, which is prepared by a specialist, who is a recognized master of the profession.—Omaha Trade Exhibit.
